The "To-Do List" web application was initially created with Dynamic Web Project. Before building the project with Maven, I configured and converted it to a Maven project. I selected the option to automatically build within the project menu at the top of the window. This option facilitates the compilation of source files automatically. In other words, whenever a file in the workspace is modified, the build is executed in the background automatically. To ensure that all changes are preserved, I unchecked "build automatically", generated a javadoc, and chose to do it manually by selecting "build project." I found the script for the assignment in the docs subdirectory.
